Bows and flows of angel hair
and ice-cream castles in the air
and feather canyons everywhere:
I've looked at clouds that way

But now they only block the sun.
They rain and snow on everyone.
So many things I would've done,
but clouds got in my way . . .

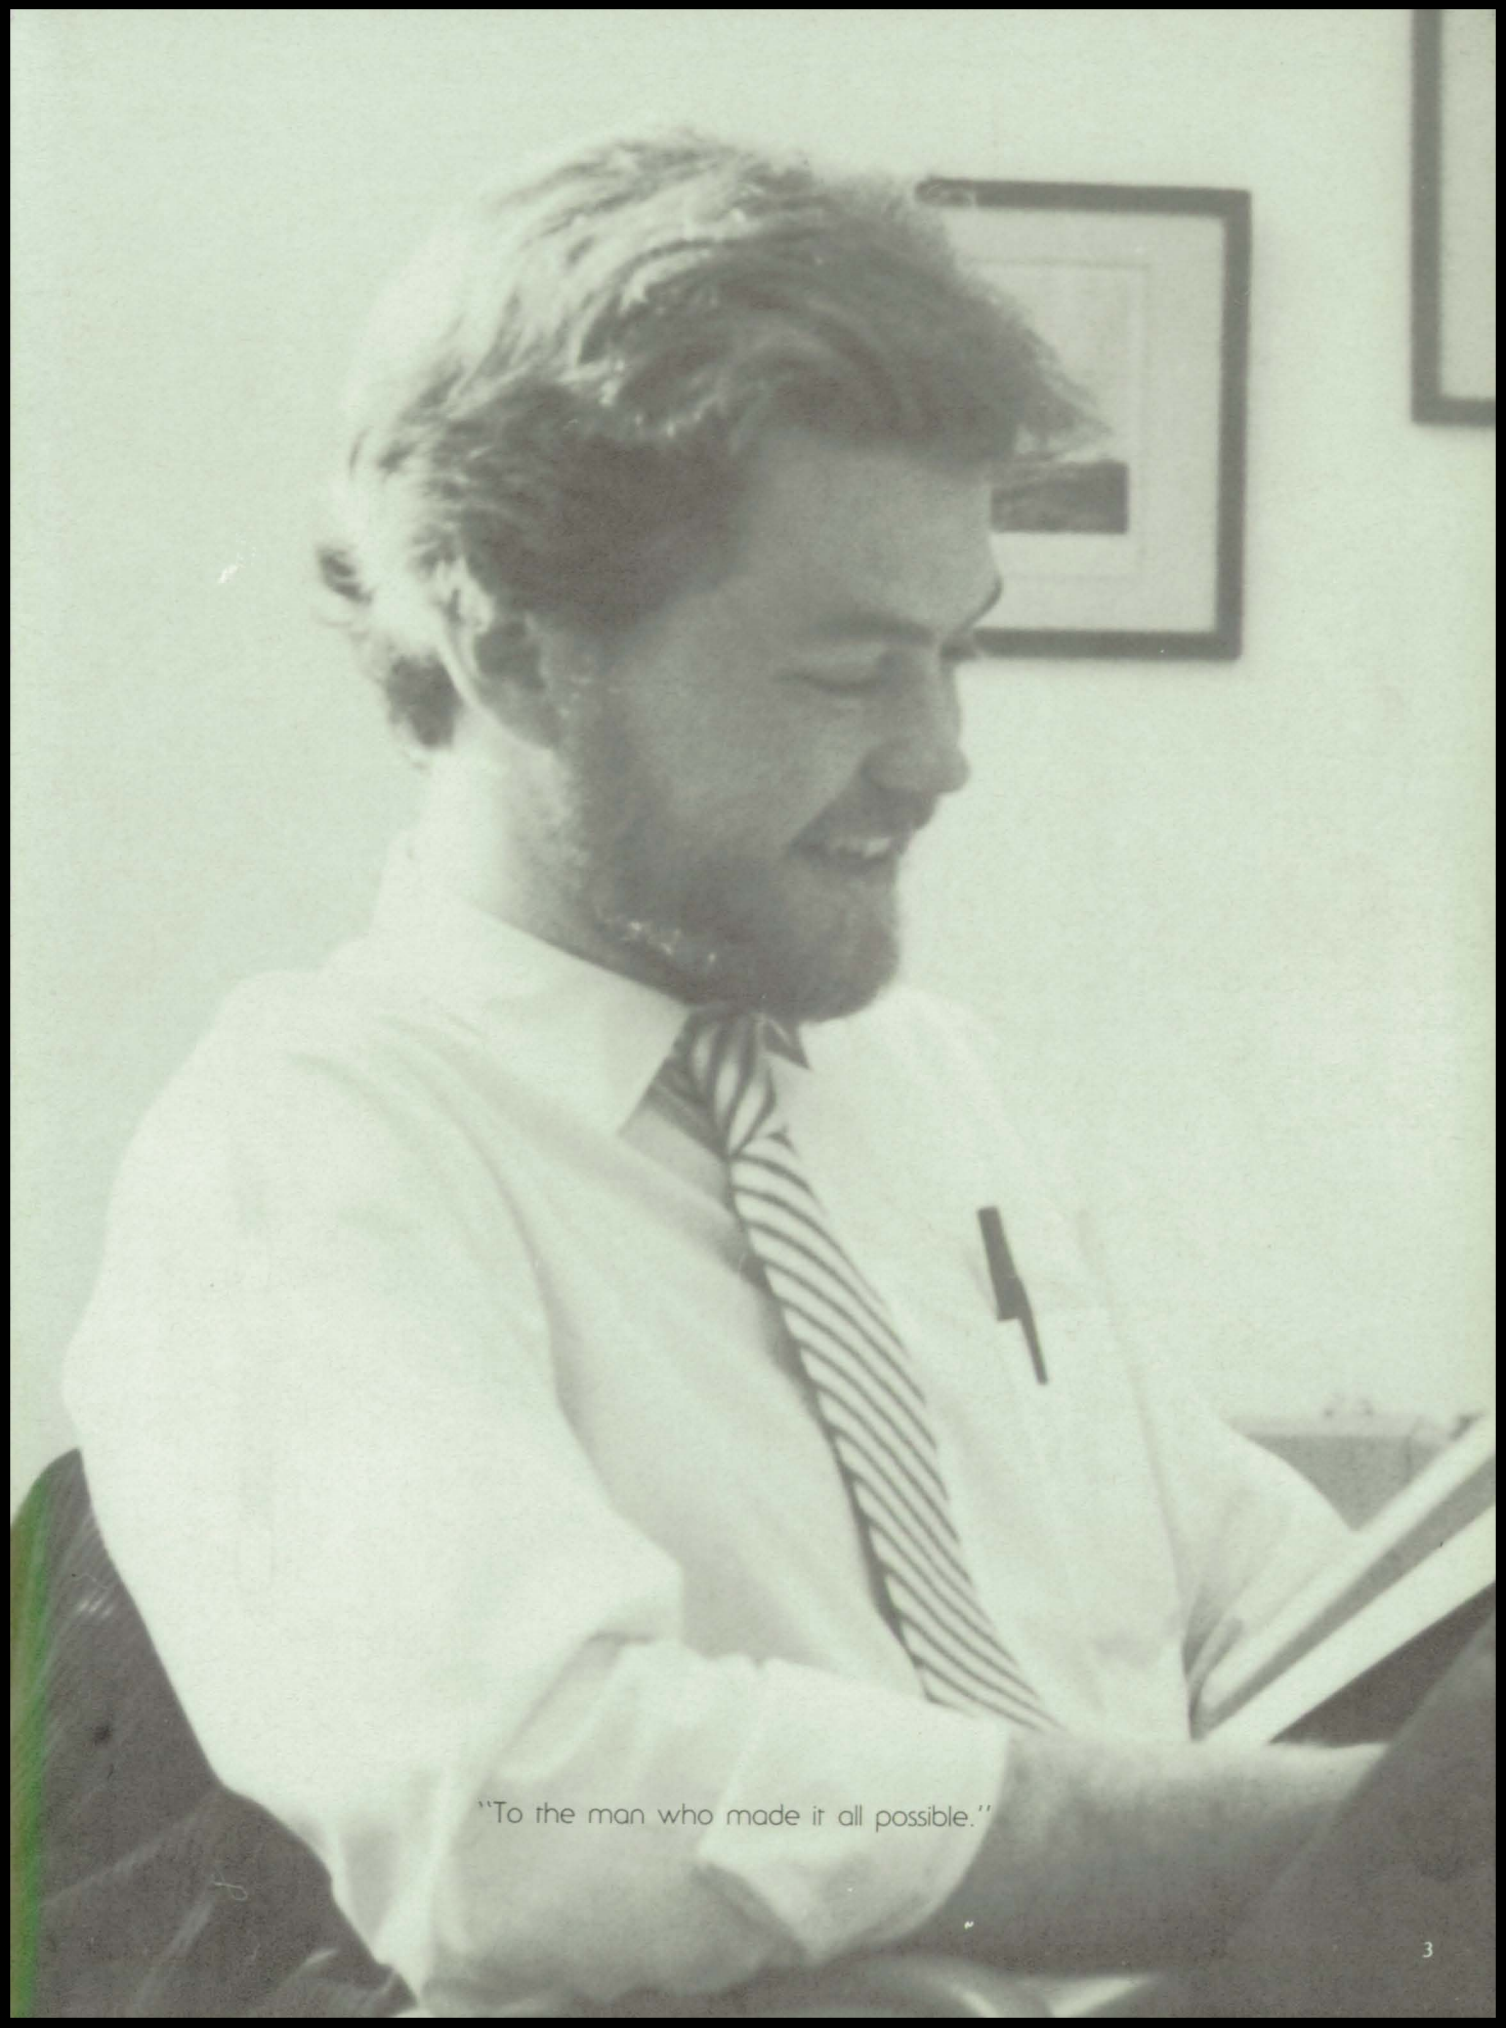

I've looked at clouds from both sides now:
from up and down, and still somehow
it's clouds illusions I recall:
I really don't know clouds, at all.

TAKE TIME

Take time to talk,
For you may ask of all things
Unknown to you.

Take time to laugh,
For smiles relinquish sorrows,
And spread happiness.

Take time to listen,
For you may learn
From the words of the wise.

Take time to think,
For the realm of knowledge
Is neverending.

Take time to think,
For there is beauty
In every part of the world around you.

Take time to feel,
For the emotions of your heart
Often control the reasoning of your mind.

Take time to live,
For each day is filled with new opportunities
That will be gone tomorrow.

Take time to dream,
For survival is forever challenging
The powers of your imagination.

Take time to love,
For the sharing of all these things
Is the miracle of life.

 A Pilgrim's faith may fail
 Absence makes the heart
 Grow fonder,

 The trail.

Cursing the quest,
 Courting disaster,
 Measureless rains forbade.
 Moments of rest,
 Glimpses of laughter are
 Treasured along the road.

 May stumble, your thoughts
 May start to stray.
 But through it all,
 A heart held humble
 Levels and lights your way.

A Special Visitor

On a crisp fall afternoon, the Annie Wright student body was awakened from mid-afternoon slumber by the fire alarm. The whole school waltzed out into the fall air. The timing, though, wasn't so good. For minutes later, Mrs. Barbara Bush, wife of the Vice-President of the United States, was scheduled to arrive.

Eventually the school got settled in the Great Hall, and the arrival came off as planned. Though Mrs. Bush was on a busy schedule and originally had intended to be at the school only to rest, she did pause for about ten minutes with us in the Great Hall. She talked briefly about her schedule as wife of the Vice-President, and also about her concern over declining literacy rates in the country.

And then Mrs. Bush announced that for her, resting meant to go jogging. Sure enough, later that afternoon, Mrs. Bush could be seen trotting off into the sunset, sporting a pair of patriotic Nike shoes, and with a faithful flock of body guards panting along behind her.

Cinderella

Cinderella, the opening production of Annie Wright's 1982-83 dramatic season, was performed by the fourth, fifth, and sixth grades during the first week of November. The show featured fine acting and singing, as well as a fair amount of leaping and dancing, as these photographs show.

Peter Tomter and Emily Robinson took the roles of Cinderella and her Prince Charming, Monica Bailey appeared as the fairy godmother, and many others filled out the fine cast. Lower School music teacher Mary Ann Ball directed the show.

Sleeping Beauty

Sleeping Beauty, the age-old story of love conquering evil, was presented just before Spring vacation by the first, second, and third grades, for a very appreciative audience of parents, students, faculty and friends.

The show was directed by Chris Nettle, and featured wonderful costumes, songs, and dances. All of the students in the three grades were involved, and they all did a fine job and had a great deal of fun.

In its first year of competition, the volleyball team at Annie Wright aimed for the top. It didn't reach it, but it made a definite impression. Many opposing coaches found it hard to believe the Gators were a first-year team, according to coach Beryl Horton. The Gators went to the regional tournament before being eliminated; next year, most of that team will return for another outstanding season.

Annie Wright's Tennis Team had an extremely successful season, the best in several years. The fact that the team posted a 5-3 record in league play indicates a certain level of success; but that success is much more amazing when one considers that the Gators were playing against triple-A schools, with 1500-2000 students each. At last count, our upper school numbered . . . 80? The Gators shot down some big guns. Top five players were Adrie Kusserow, Amy Nyce, Milkiko Ochi, Deirdre Allen, and Kristen Lindeman, and many others contributed.

The Annie Wright Garors did very well this season even though the team was primarily composed of freshmen. The three seniors also contributed significantly with Nancy Brocard averaging 11 points a game to lead the team. The leading junior contender was Carolyn Hawes with 9 points a game. In district playoffs, the Garors came up against a team with average height of 5'9", while we were midgers at an average of 5'4". Despite the height difference, senior forward Robbi Fiori at 5'6" and guard Jade Larrabee at 5'1" managed to grab a few rebounds from those jolly green giants. The Garors lost the game but played exceptionally well, showing both skill and determination and proving that Annie will continue to be a threat in the future.

Your class is nearing, it is clear,
Rising up throughout the years.

The first part of the paper discusses the importance of understanding the cultural context of the research. It highlights the need for researchers to be sensitive to the values and beliefs of the communities they are studying. This is particularly important in the field of education, where cultural differences can significantly impact learning outcomes. The author argues that a one-size-fits-all approach to education is not only ineffective but also potentially harmful. Instead, educators should strive to create a culturally responsive environment that respects and builds upon the knowledge and experiences of all students.

The second part of the paper explores the challenges of conducting research in diverse cultural settings. It discusses the difficulties of finding a common ground between the researcher's perspective and the participants' worldview. The author notes that language barriers, differing communication styles, and varying levels of literacy can all pose significant obstacles. To overcome these challenges, the author suggests a collaborative approach where researchers work closely with community members to design and implement the study. This approach not only helps to build trust and rapport but also ensures that the research is relevant and meaningful to the community being studied.

The third part of the paper presents a case study of a research project conducted in a rural, low-income community. The study aimed to explore the factors that influence children's school attendance and academic performance. The researchers found that cultural beliefs about education, as well as economic constraints, were major barriers to school success. The study also identified the importance of community support and involvement in educational initiatives. Based on these findings, the authors recommend several strategies for improving educational outcomes in such communities, including providing cultural sensitivity training for teachers, offering financial assistance to families, and involving parents and community leaders in the decision-making process.

In conclusion, the paper emphasizes the need for a more holistic and culturally informed approach to education research. It calls for researchers to move beyond a purely academic perspective and to engage with the communities they are studying in a meaningful and respectful way. Only through such an approach can we hope to develop effective educational practices that truly serve the needs of all children.
